Special Issue
Entrepreneurship, Small Business and Innovation in Transition Economies

Guest Editor:
Desislava I. Yordanova (Sofia University “St. Kliment Ohridski”)

Deadline: July 31, 2016

The contexts for entrepreneurship are essential for understanding this phenomenon providing opportunities and setting boundaries for individual actions (Welter, 2011). The profound political, economic, and institutional changes in transition economies have stimulated the emergence and development of entrepreneurship and small business ownership. It is recognized that the entrepreneurship and SME sector play an important role in the transition process (McMillan and Woodruff, 2002; Estrin et al., 2006). This special issue of the International Journal of Latest Trends in Finance and Economic Sciences (E-ISSN 2047-0916), a journal published in United Kingdom by ExcelingTech Publisher, UK, is dedicated to the state-of-the-art in the research on entrepreneurship, small business and innovation in transition economies. Topics of interest might include but are not restricted to the following:

- Diversity and distinctiveness of entrepreneurship and small business in transition economies
- Contribution of entrepreneurship and SMEs to economic development and sustainability at national and regional levels
- Governance, management and financial performance of SMEs in transition economies
- Financing of entrepreneurship and SMEs in transition economies: supply and demand
- Innovation in SMEs in transition economies
- International entrepreneurship
- Internationalization of SMEs from transition economies
- The effects of globalisation on entrepreneurship and SMEs in transition economies
- Foreign Direct Investments in new and small businesses from transition economies
- Policies and best practices for supporting entrepreneurship and small business in transition economies
